Coyne makes light of his daring bravery in diving into the cold water and being borne by the current for more than a quarter of a mile toward the Brooklyn Navy Yard until almost Fireman, baggagemaster, mail exhausted he was hauled into a boat elerk, negro porter and one woman by two other policemen and a life ssenger travelling from Texas to saver. Harkins is still in the Hudson Street Hospital.

The policeman was at the pavilion two blocks away from the Corlears street pier when he heard frantic cries for help coming from the direction of the river He ran to the pier, where several mer ere excitedly pointing out into the darkness, and the cries of a man, grow

Without a moment's hesitation Coyne threw off his heavy coat and night stick and dived head foremost into the water "Where are you?" he called to the drowning man, but the only answer was "Help! Help! Help!"

Swimming in the darkness, he gradu ally reached Harkins, guided by the sound of his voice. The drowning man Southern between Chattanooga and Harriman. This train was awaiting orders at Loudon when it was advised of the wreck.

The engine of the Cincinnati Southern train ran up to the scene of the wreck and by pulling two of the rear sleepers back on the track and away from the was a with the current, hoping for help.

"Where are they?" he heard a norm.

"Where are they?" he heard a policeman ask of the men on the pier.
"They're both gone," was the response. "Not on your life!" yeled Coyne.

'Get a boat or we will be." Policemen Cauker and McQueeney and John Coakley, a volunteer life-saver, put out in a small boat and after groping in the darkness finally found the tance to Harlem Hospital, because that man. They hauled them aboard and both institution was too crowded, and Bellewere taken to the Hudson Street Hospi tal, whence Coyne was removed to his some this morning.

Thought He Was Gone, but Held On

The scene of the wreck was between Loudon and Lenoir City, Tenn., where the railroad parallels the Tennesse. River for a considerable distance. The construction of the road at this point was very difficult engineering and it is the most unfortunate place for a wreck.

Engineer a Hero.

Just before Engineer Bibb died a physician endeavored to have him drink a little whiskey in the hope of extending his life as long as possible. The engineer refused it, saying:

"Tvs never touched it yet and don't expect to begin to drink it now."

Continuing, he said:

"I am going to die, so go and look "Svend HeWas Gone, but Held On "I thought it was all over with me." the plucky polleeman admitted to an Evenling World reporter as he lay in bed this morning. "When we began to drift with the current I couldn't see much but the bottom of the river, and I'll tell you right now I wasn't looking for that spot.

"Harkins was a dead weight, and I confined my efforts to keeping on the top. I saw it was no go against the current and tide, and I gave that up. I just trusted in the boat and the mighty small hope I had. I never knew how much a man could think of in a few minutes. I was in the water about ten minutes. Perhaps a little more, but it seemed like two hours.

"Coakley should get the credit, for if I held up Harkins and saved him Coakley, by his quick work with the boat, saved us both."
